Peppertree team at the IQA.

A number of the Peppertree team are members of the Institute of Quarrying Australia. The IQA is a professional body for quarry personnel throughout Australia that provide the opportunity for education, networking, training and events to over 1500 members.

Recently we were fortunate to have attended the Illawarra Sub-Branch networking dinner held in Goulburn where we had the opportunity to collaborate and network with the other local quarry operators.

Staff Profile: Meet Cameron Atkinson

Our Engineering Manager at just 23 years of age Cameron joined Boral in January 2016 at the age of 17 as a mechanical fitter apprentice at Marulan South Limestone Mine and with hard work, skill and dedication, has since worked his way to becoming our Mining Engineer at the age of 23.

What do you love most about your job?

I enjoy the daily challenges and opportunities to problem solve collaboratively as a team. There are numerous aspects in a forever changing operational environment that continue to challenge you in the way you think and communicate across the sites departments. It is a great combination of engineering system improvements, managing employees, contractor management, and customer engagement. I love seeing and sharing the passion with the people I work with every day and creating a positive team environment throughout. During my 7 years at Boral, I have been lucky enough to have worked with and learnt from many great leaders over several sites. As a major employer in the local area, the Boral Marulan South Limestone Mine has a number of opportunities for people of all ages and abilities. Watching people grow and develop within our mine and business is a great outcome for both the community and the business.

What are some traits that you think great leaders possess?

The leaders who have had the biggest impact on me are those who are dedicated, positive, uplifting, open and true to their word. Someone you can rely on, relate to and learn from their experiences.

Cameron enjoys flying planes, skiing in the winter and wakeboarding in the summer and balances his work life by taking time out to spend with his friends and family. Cameron is a true inspiration and sets a great example that you can achieve anything that you put your mind to.
